A: The best known security software that I recommend you is Ultrasurf, which in my opinion is ideal for anyone that suffers from constant constant harrassment by the security force from viruses. This software allows you to use a proxy to conceal your true IP address and the software that I use is Free it is able to work on both Linux and Windows at once. It's normally hard to use this software as it is based on having to install free tools and constantly update the various programs for it to work, most people, especially those who have no experience with Linux, would not be able to do this. I always recommend it and you can buy it for a fair price off the website. On top of this I would suggest buying the following for extra protection - ZoneAlarm Antivirus and Internet Security Suite. I don't do affiliate marketing though, but they do have a trial version available. Q: Changing the code of a new object instance class MyClass(object): def __init__(self): self.param1 = random.randrange(1, 10) def f_get_param(self): return self.param1 def f_change(self): self.param1 = 3 a = MyClass() I need to change the value of the parameter, but for whatever reason the attribute 'param1' appears to be read only. As soon as I create a new instance of 'a' in a separate method, the attribute is changed. a = MyClass() b = MyClass() a.f_get_param() >>> 3 a.f_change() >>> 3 a.param1 = 7 a.f_get_param() >>> 3 Can someone explain this behaviour? A: You're looking at a separate instance of the class, because the line inside the init method isn't going to change the value of the object instance that's used in later instances. a = MyClass() a.f_get_param() # a.param1 = 3 b = MyClass() b.f_get_param() # b.param1 = 3 a.f_change()
