President Donald Trump's declaration of a national emergency by announcing a form of resistance. In Washington, D.C., protesters are planning to occupy the city's Department of Homeland Security building in a bid to stop the transfer of power to the White House. In New York City, Democratic senators joined Manhattan Borough President Gale Brewer and others in announcing a series of actions in response to the administration's move. They called on New Yorkers to block the president on Saturday when he tries to make a scheduled visit to Trump Tower. In Portland, Oregon, protesters are planning to stand in the doorway of Trump's border wall with Mexico — a dramatic escalation of a protest plan that caused the cancellation of Trump's 09e8f5149f

Me and My Mango So that has not been the most eloquent post I have ever written. I say that in jest, I know it is a cliché phrase and that I am quoting someone, or maybe it was that post by Maryrose Phillips, but it was something she said that sticks with me. Anyway, enough with the rambling. Yesterday was dad's birthday. I tried to make Dad look like he was old, and he definitely tried. He was greasy, and he washed his hair with the beard grease and got his mustache glued into his hair. He was full of smiles, and he was happy to be 66. Anyway, even though he was a hot mess, I love him. We had a late dinner to celebrate. I bought Dad as many T-shirts as he wanted. (He got two) We had chips, and a few beers, and I bought him a new pair of glasses for his birthday. He bought me a foot massager for my foot and a new teddy bear for the kids. Daddy, if you are reading this, you need to get me the heart shaped mirror you had in your office. And a card. And a gift certificate to the spa if that is possible. But I like you the way you are just fine. Today was humid, and sticky, and I got home from work and my hair was still damp. I decided to take the extra time and make brownies. In fact, I made Dad two, and the kids two. And if they eat them all today I won't even have to make them any more for a few days. (I know what you are thinking, Julie-Ate-All-the-Brownies-Day.) I found this recipe on Taste of Home, and it was great. It is super easy, and you can make them any time of year. And you can change the ingredients, you do not have to do anything, they just bake. I figured these would make a great gift, and so I did. The kids, who love brownies, and my Mom (who Dad is going to buy a gift for), all love
